

How is a “policy” narrative different from a personal one?

1. The personal narrative is an attempt to explain something for yourself – you use the writing to analyze and come to an understanding of an experience
2. The policy narrative is designed to convince someone else of something – you, in this case, know what you think about it.
  - a. Your hope is to influence someone who may vote or enact policy
  - b. You may use a small amount of set-up or framing material but the bulk of the composition is made up of a story or stories that illustrate the point you want to make – this isn’t an essay.
